She had been for some time very low with typhoid fever, and just at daylight her husband laid down for a few minutes' rest and fell asleep. In about twenty minutes he awoke and found his wife gone. Searching through the house and not finding her, he went out and in passing the well, which is very shallow and full of water, to his horror discovered her there and d owned. Taking her out of the water he raised the alarm and called in the neighbors, but it was too late to restore life. Mrs. Waight was an excellent woman, one of the best of neighbors, slways a constant attendant upon the sick, and ready for any good work. She leaves a large circle of bereaved friends. There is no doubt that she was delirious, and it [51w2] is thought that the fear that her two children who were sick with the fever, would die led her to commit the set.
